

INTRO

Hello everyone, it's me, Daggz. I make this statement to address everything I have done/been accused of in the past year of me getting into controversies, what I am doing/have done to fix these mistakes, and to also clear up other allegations that have no basis in reality or fact. I make this document not as a way to push blame onto any other person, or to escape the consequences that have arrived from these situations, but to simply explain what I believe I have done wrong, and to defend myself on claims I believe were made with false intentions.

Here are some disclaimers before we begin:

- This document is heavily relying on memory, and what I had realized after extensive self reflection. I am doing this as a way to avoid having to go on Twitter as much as possible, as being on the website for a prolonged period of time causes me physical distress. Key events and receipts may not be linked or posted here, but are very accessible if you know where to look. And if you're reading this, I figure you have already seen all there is to be seen.
- I am notorious for being bad at wording things, so although this document will be heavily proofread and edited before publishing, please be patient with how I go around tying things. If I repeat information too many times, or make a sentence that might not make complete sense, please be patient.
- I ask anyone who doesn't like me or the actions that I had taken part of in this document to please read through everything I have to say before forming an opinion. This doesn't mean you need to forgive me, all I ask is for you to at the very least give me the time to explain myself.
- Some events I have been involved with also tangentially relate to my boyfriend, Quinnamon. I will not be going into too much detail about anything involving them, as he has her own statement going into detail about his struggles that are being levied by our cyberstalker. They are in the process of working on their own statement, but it will take more time, as it has years of history to go over and document. Please save any opinions you have on him, or us together, for when that document drops. I will log in one last time to retweet it when it does for you to know.

I'll start off with what is definitely the most pressing controversy I have been in, and we'll go from there.

My run ins with a semi-prominent FNaF community member

This is without a doubt the thing I regret doing the most, and where I can admit the most wrong for. For the sake of not getting this person involved in anything else regarding me, I will keep their name anonymous. But if you are reading this document, you likely know who this part is meant to be about.

Back in February, a prominent figure in the FNaF Twitter community came out reciting their experiences with someone they were briefly involved with, and the discomfort that had brought them. The person being accused for this stuff being 14, and the accuser being 16. The evidence provided numerous sexual messages between the two parties, one including a blurred screenshot of what was (supposedly) the 14 year olds nudes.

Seeing this, I had a very knee jerk and emotional response. I saw comments made towards this kid that I saw as really gross and unnecessary to the conversation, and in a decision that I had made with no critical thinking, I had thrown my hat in when I shouldn't have. Being very confrontational with the accuser, and how I believe they could've handled this situation better.

In my thread about this, I had also encouraged people to report an account that had more evidence on the 14 year old, which was the one that provided the blurred nudes screenshots. I did this because I thought those messages being public were dangerous, and could lead to harassment to someone who I at the time, believed should not have been publicly shamed for the events that had transpired. To my knowledge, this account was never taken down, but one account that was suspended, was the initial accuser, and victim of these messages.

Despite this not even being my initial target, I still celebrated the takedown of this person's account. This was another major regret on my part, and was an absolutely uncalled for reaction that essentially boiled down to me using my platform to take down somebody. Saying it was an emotional reaction isn't something that can be used as an excuse for every one of my actions, and in hindsight, has shown me I am incredibly irresponsible when dealing with situations like these. This is something I am especially trying to work on, and is the main reason why I have not been on Twitter in more than a month.

I was understandably called out for my reaction I had here. I was not level headed when entering this situation that, as a community member with a much bigger following, should not have entered in the first place, but I also handled my involvement in the least responsible way I possibly could've. Making the situation worse for everyone involved. I may have had good intentions, but they were overshadowed by my mismanagement, and lack of critical thinking. To both of the kids involved in this situation, I am sorry for how I handled this. Everything to follow after this could have been completely avoided if I hadn't gotten involved that night. I hope any extra strain and stress I may have given you through my actions has since gone away, and even if I should've learned my lesson sooner, I promise to not get involved in something this wreckless again.

My continued mishandling of this person's controversies

In early March, I was contacted by another anonymous person, giving me alleged information that the same person I had gotten into controversy with was engaging in more inappropriate exchanges with even younger people. I originally had no intention of getting involved, but I was really disappointed by how this person was initially handling these allegations, and decided to take over the case myself.

I will especially not name any of the victims involved in this case, as I wish to not drag their names any further than what has already happened. But for context, a 13 year old and 16 year old had been put onto my radar, giving me information about the accused person, and how they believed their interactions were inappropriate. I didn't get all the facts straight, and believed the 13 year old in particular was groomed into these messages. Despite later retraction of this label by the victims themselves, I had neglected to get rid of this wording in my statement I made, causing a lot more confusion and misleading information to be circulated thanks to my involvement.

In hindsight, what was going on was an inappropriate exchange between two minors that should not have been made public. Much like the first situation that led me to even get on this person's radar. How I failed to even connect that in my mind when in my involvement with this case is absolutely absurd to me, and was a complete hypocrisy on my end. Once again, good intentions being washed away by my inexcusable mismanagement of serious situations. This was the final straw for me, and what inevitably made me decide to leave any social media where I could get involved in situations like this all together. I am clearly not responsible enough for a platform such as that, and it is best for everyone's sake for me to not get involved in any space where I could potentially butt my head in where I shouldn't.

I blame no one in this situation other than myself. Although I believe there are things that could have been done differently by a myriad of people, I am the one who had the responsibility to handle this with the respect and care it deserved. Despite believing I was, I had neglected to do many things that would have made this situation easier on the victims, and the one accused themselves. Getting involved again in this situation to begin with was a mistake on its own, and that is a mistake I will need to live with for a while.

To the 16 year old victim, I apologize for not doing the diligence of editing the document for your comfortability. Ignoring to do so was what I believe to be my biggest mistake when handling this. I actively went against your wishes by not doing so, and it has been something I have been majorly reflecting on.

To the 13 year old victim, I misjudged a lot when it came to your experience, and in result, invalidated a lot of what you went through. My own judgment and bias heavily warped the facts of what was going on, and I should've thought more critically about what you had presented to me.

I am sincerely sorry for any strain or harassment I could have ever brought your way. And if you're reading this, please let me know if there is anything I can do to make it up to you.

And to the one accused themselves. You're still a kid. The people you talked to were still kids. I just turned 18 not even 3 months ago with little life experiences, I am still a kid. Despite this, I am now legally an adult, even if I don't fully know what that exactly means yet. I was supposed to be the one that should have been the most responsible in this situation. I mishandled every situation regarding you, and labeled you as things you were not. Even if what I was saying I genuinely believed, it doesn't change the fact that with hindsight, I was wrong. I have already apologized to you privately, and I am happy we can have resolved this situation and have gone our separate ways. If there is any silver lining to come from that situation, it's that it at least made you reflect on the things you weren't innocent of. I am happy to hear that you are continuing to make strides to improve yourself, and I wish to leave you, and anyone you associate with alone for the foreseeable future. I will continue to work on myself, and try to do the same as well. I apologize for calling you a groomer, for making exchanges that shouldn't have been public known, and for causing you much more stress than you needed. Even if some of the things you had done weren't right, the strong language I had used in that document was not appropriate for what had actually happened. I hope we have both learned lessons from our run ins together, and that we could now go down a path of self improvement and staying out of trouble.

This is the situation where I believe I was completely in the wrong. I did many things I should not have done, and I am doing many things to try and circumvent anything like this from happening again. I have blocked Twitter off every device I own, and have made it significantly harder for me to access my accounts. After I post this statement, this account will remain dormant for an indefinite amount of time. Twitter only makes me feel worse every time I use it, and I have proven I am not responsible enough to handle a platform on that website. I'm also in the early stages of setting up therapy sessions for myself, and am trying to take extra disciplinary actions to avoid anything like this from ever happening again.

The next part of this document is going over what I would consider micro controversies that have been severely contorted and twisted into things they are not. These claims against me are typically attached with this big claim, and I want to address the falsehoods provided here.

Claims I am anti-Palestine/a Zionist

This is probably the most ridiculous claim that has been peddled towards me. This started from another controversy that stemmed from a FNaF creator Entom, who was aggressively pressured into speaking out on the genocide currently happening on the Gaza strip. They ended up arguing his obligation to do so, which led to a controversy of their own.

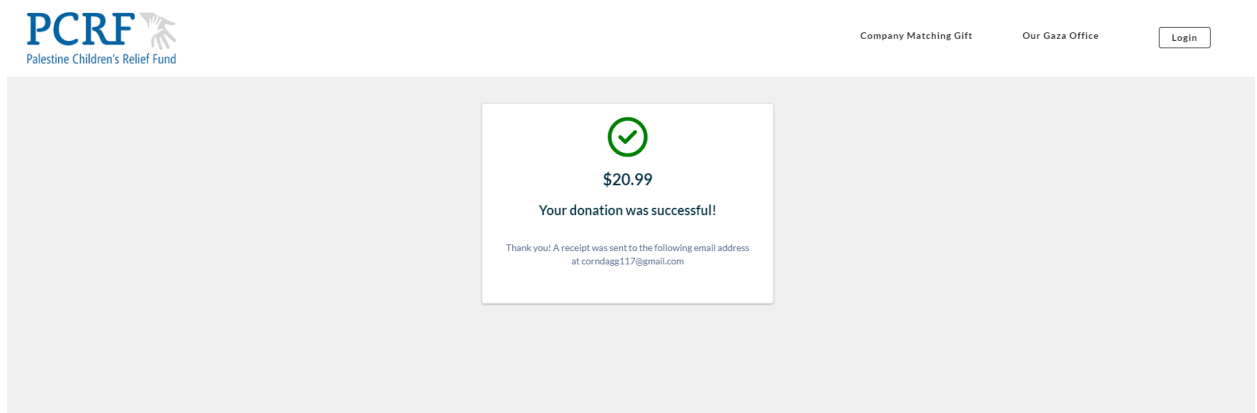

Following this, Entom had posted an extremely alarming post that almost read as a suicide note. Seeing everything that led to this person being brought to this state sickened me, and in my typical fashion, I made a hastily put together statement expressing my opinion on the matter. In which I said the following:

"Activism" is not fucking harassing entertainers into spreading awareness or virtue signaling for creators or big accounts. Stop trying to get people to talk about things not appropriate for their account just so you can look good."

I admit I worded things wrong here. I never intended to imply speaking up against sensitive issues is inappropriate for certain accounts to do. That was never my intention to claim, and I do not agree with that statement. The point I wanted to make was that I personally believe that performative activism ultimately does more harm than good when it comes to a sensitive subject. Seeing people pressure somebody into speaking up about something so hard that it led to unjust harassment and what read as a suicide note didn't seem like the best thing for our message. That was what I was trying to say, and I believe I have clarified that numerous times after saying it. Not many people mention this, but I also left links and resources to actual places you could donate to for genuine help. Yes, I did so aggressively, but to claim I am anti Palestine, when in reality I am just bad at wording things, is an extremely major misjudgement at best, or an intentional mischaracterization of me at worst.

Being labeled this specifically upsets me as I had not been educated on the Israeli-Palestine conflict for my entire life until last October. Being further educated on the topic made me really upset at how I had not been taught so much valuable history by our institutions and media, and I became very passionate about this cause, much like many others.

I actively donate to charities, I participate in boycotts, I have a whole charity stream planned to do sometime in the near future, which a lot of people claim I am only saying as a way to deflect criticism. In reality, the reason why it's been delayed so much is because of my current financial situation and mental state. If you don't know, YouTube has currently demonetized my entire channel, and I am not making nearly enough money for what I want to invest in to make this stream happen. I want this to be a good event that people will actually pay attention to, and in order to do that I need to invest some money into it. Money I currently do not have, as I am not earning. I need to pay for my own food and other living utilities, so as of right now, setting this event up has been very difficult. Despite this, I can assure you that it will still happen, I just need time, especially after making this statement.

Claims that I have defended a proshipper/excuse proshipping

This is one I genuinely have no idea how people came to the conclusion of. Basically, this stems from an account I had beef with during the Phisnom drama. This person would later be called out for having done weird proship stuff with the character Gregory from FNaF when they were 15. This person has since stated they own up to this, and completely disavow that behavior now that they are older, and have since left the internet. I believe this was the best course of action for them to take, and I commended them for doing so. I believe this person should not be persecuted for the wrong things they did as a minor. We don't know what they could have been going through to do this stuff, and they seem to have gotten a lot better, and completely disavow that behavior. If I am missing something here, please enlighten me, but generally that seems to be the entire controversy there.

No, I do not defend proshipping. I think it's gross, and it carries a lot of trauma for people I care about. I don't think this even needs to be stated, but obviously the same goes for lolicon and zoophilia. Even if these things are done fictionally, I believe it is wrong, and should be ostracized. I also believe minors who are roped into these harmful ideologies who go on to grow and learn from their mistakes when participating in this media should not be held to the highest form of responsibility, and should be allowed to exist freely after taking accountability. These statements do not need to be mutually exclusive.

I hope this clears up a lot of misconceptions about me, and I wish to fix the things I have genuinely done wrong. I can't guarantee I will respond to any questions or comments this post gets, as right after posting this I will once again be completely off Twitter, but what I can guarantee is I will not get into any controversies like this again, due to my absence on the platform. I do not ask for forgiveness for the things I had done wrong, but what I will ask for is privacy, and to please respect my boundaries going forward. I am working on improving myself every day, and the first step to that is to simply be off of this website. I hope this was a sufficient response to those who needed to hear it, and I am going to go back to laying my head low for the time being.

Thank you for making it this far, and I promise to do better.